New publication:*Biennale Venedig: Die Beteiligung der Schweiz, 1920–2013 (Essays & Materials)

The Venice Biennale, first held in 1895, has the richest traditions in the world as a platform for national identities represented through art. Since 1920 Switzerland has also made use of this opportunity for self-projection, sporadically at first, then consistently from 1932, and ever since 1952 in a pavilion designed by Bruno Giacometti standing independently in the Giardini. The Swiss Institute for Art Research (SIK-ISEA) has produced a book reflecting its research on Swiss contributions to the «Biennale di Venezia» from early beginnings until the present day.

For 93 years Switzerland has been among the countries participating in the Venice Biennale, which has evolved over a history of almost 120 years into one of the major institutions of the international art scene. The Confederation first accepted an invitation to join this «world exhibition of the art nations» (Beat Wyss) in 1920. The regular participations since 1932 have articulated Switzerland's cultural foreign policy (albeit unofficial), permitting observations about the relationship between local particularities and national identity.

This two-volume publication by the Swiss Institute for Art Research (SIK-ISEA) is the first attempt to examine and document official Swiss participations at the Venice Biennale in detail. It is the outcome of a research project devoted to the Venice Biennale that has lasted several years, initiated and supervised by Prof. Dr. Beat Wyss during a Fellowship at SIK-ISEA. A reader with 14 contributions and a lavishly illustrated volume of materials elucidate the history of Switzerland's involvement in the Biennale from various perspectives. We see, for example, how expectations have changed over the years with regard to how a nation should be represented through its art, and how the federal structure has influenced art policy. Readers will also find answers to questions about which artists were invited by the Confederation to participate in the Biennale and which of their works went on show.

To accompany the publication, SIK-ISEA marked the opening of the 55th Venice Biennale by launching the website www.biennale-venezia.ch. This online reference work is free to use and continually updated, providing information about all official Swiss participations at the Venice Biennale since 1920. It includes the contributing artists, the Commissioners and members of the Swiss Art Commission responsible for decisions, the works exhibited, secondary literature and relevant documents. Alphabetical and chronological search functions with an attractive, user-friendly interface permit wide-ranging research in all databases. SIK-ISEA has also been supplying Pro Helvetia's official Biennale site (www.biennials.ch) with selected datasets.
